

US Film festival coming to city

By Catherine Fehr
Tribune Staff Writer

All the glamour associated with the movies — spotlights and stars included — will add a touch of glitter to Salt Lake City Sept. 6 through 12 when the Trolley Corner Theatres are converted into festival grounds for USFilm.

"American Landscapes: Cycles of Hope and Despair" — "The South, The West, The City" is the theme setting the tone of the first annual film festival sponsored by the non-profit corporation USFilm.

Those frequenting the theatres danked with banners, balloons, posters and other festival trills, will be offered more than an opportunity to see some 50-plus films which explore various segments of American life.

One may walk into one of the theatres to find New York City's former mayor, John Lindsay, lecturing on city life.

Or, that lady who bumps your elbow and makes

Over 50 films exploring different segments of American life will be screened at the USFilm festival. Top, from left: Dustin Hoffman and Jon Voight in "Midnight Cowboy;" Natalie Wood, John Wayne, Jeffrey Hunter in "The Searchers," and Dori Brenner in "Next Stop, Greenwich Village." Bottom: this scene from "Stagecoach" was shot in Utah's Monument Valley.
