

The Salt Lake Tribune

Independent. Nonprofit. Pulitzer Prize winner.

First Amendment Society

As the first metropolitan daily in the United States to become a nonprofit, The Salt Lake Tribune is now community-led and community-supported. We are committed to offering all Utahns the highest quality independent local journalism, with your help.

The First Amendment Society is made up of dedicated, generous individuals who believe that the free press is vital to the health of our community, our state and our democracy. In 2021, The Tribune will enter its 150th year. To celebrate, and to secure our future, we are seeking 150 founding Society members by our anniversary celebrations in the spring of 2021.

We welcome your interest in becoming a founding member of the Society.

Benefits of First Amendment Society Membership

Society members are generous not only with their financial means but with their expertise. Members have shared ideas and insights which have helped The Tribune in its historic transient to a nonprofit. In addition to these interactions, Society members receive:

- Quarterly email updates from Tribune leadership
- Invitations to exclusive “On the Record” events. For example, Society members recently held a dialogue with Tribune editorial leadership on the response to this historic time in our community and nation
- All members names are listed on The Salt Lake Tribune’s website as a Society member

Investment levels

First Amendment Society Members commit to make gifts for three years. All donations go directly to the newsroom.

- Byline - $1,000 a year
- Headline - $2,500 a year
- Deadline - $5,000 a year
- Lifeline - $10,000 a year

Thank you for celebrating The Salt Lake Tribune’s 150th Anniversary and ensuring the next 150 years of independent local journalism in Utah
